A NEW HOME (CHASING DESTINY BOOK 1) BY ABIGAIL DENVER PDF

Twelve year old, Hannah is a normal girl, as far as anyone can see. She likes to swim and enjoys playing computer games. When she starts to have visions of the world ending, and how she can prevent it from happening, she doesn't really want to prevent it. Why should she give up her life to save the world? How can she possibly convince people she's not crazy?

Very Good Book

By P. Parks

This book is a very good book. The girl this book is written about has had visions since a very young age and they have always come true. Now she has a vision that all adults will die from a disease within seven years. This book does talk a lot about death so this is not a book for younger readers or people prone to worrying that the world may come to an end. There must be another book that follows this one because I want to know the ending to this story.

Just ok

By Shannart

This is a kindle freebie I acquired, part 1 of a series. A young girl has visions of a disease coming which will kill all adults and what the children must do to survive. A twist on the "plague" post-apocalyptic concept, so I began to read. In this first installation, the girl tells her family, and they proceed to contact the people the girl says will make this happen and start building their compound.

The storyline was ok, the characters were ok; however everything only hit my "ok" button. Nothing really causes the book to stand out for me. There was nothing intriguing in the set up, and the characters, while believable, seem to lack something in the development. This book is only around "novella" length--estimated 62 pages. While I don't regret the time I spent reading this book, I will not be looking at the rest of the series.

"And a little child shall lead them"

By Maryann Anderson

When she was 3 years old, Hannah woke in the middle of the night screaming for her mother, Leah. She told her mother that she needed to go to the door because the police were coming to tell her that "grandpa" was dead. Leah told her that Grandpa is fine and that she has just had a bad dream. But just then there's a knock at the door and it's the police telling them that Leah's father has just been killed in a auto accident.

Nine years later, 12-year old Hannah has another vision and tells her parents, "Everyone over the age of 20 in the entire world is going to die. We have six years to prepare for it." Her visions also tell her what she needs to do to bring a group of children together into a type of "commune" to begin preparing for the end of the world as they know it and to prepare them to become the "Adams and Eves" for the new world. (Does this remind anyone else of "Lord of the Flies"?)

This is book one of a five-book series and I'm not very fond of those. I don't mind purchasing additional books in a series to find out what happens to secondary characters but I don't like to be left hanging so that I have to buy another book to tell me how the current book I am reading will end. I certainly don't like having to buy multiple other books to learn the ending. I look at this as the "hook" book that draws you into buying the entire Chasing Destiny series. In it's defense, the additional books in this series cost only $0.99 each so that's less than $4.00 for the entire five-book series. This still is not real high on my list of books I love.
