Right from the start Kathleen Dowling Singh proclaims: "Dying is safe. You are safe. Your loved one is safe. That is the message of all the words here." True to her promise, Dowling Singh walks us through the final stages of death with complete honesty, yet she manages to quell the ultimate fear of dying. Speaking of the "Nearing Death Experience," Singh has discovered a sequence of phases or qualities that signals when a dying person is entering the final stages of spiritual and psychological transformation. She names them as relaxation, withdrawal, radiance, interiority (a time of going inward), silence, sacred, transcendence, knowing, intensity, and perfection--all of which she explains in great detail. A hospice worker and worldwide lecturer, Dowling Singh is being touted as the next Kubler-Ross. Time will tell. One thing is for certain: this is an astonishingly intelligent and engrossing book about consciously surrendering our bodies and our egos to death. There are 500,000 hospice patients in the U.S. and 5 million hospice workers worldwide. And every one of them would probably find profound comfort in this breakthrough book on dying. --Gail Hudson

From Publishers Weekly

Singh, a hospice worker with training in psychology and an avid interest in religion, here combines a Kubler-Ross-like approach to death and dying with an Eastern religious take on finitude. She questions our sense of death as an "outrage" and her book is filled with the cornerstones of Buddhism and Tibetan religion, ideas that provide no easy comfort ("Our fear of death is grounded in a strong sense of the 'I'"). Some of Singh's consolations are not as strong-minded as this analysis of the ego, however. Occasionally, she uses insights that are hardly transcendent ("As we enter the Nearing Death Experience, both emotion and cognition clear.... Beatitudes flow naturally from our being, now a vehicle for of Spirit"). She is at her most perceptive when she seeks to explain why death is so frightening to us: "We are able to maintain the illusion of a separate self... able to maintain it until we enter death row. The moment we receive a terminal prognosis is the moment that fiction begins to transform into documentary." Singh works with terminal patients and can give careful accounts of dying bodies and minds, yet she also notes that the living in fact have no idea what death is like. Nonetheless, her book serves a wise and moving expression of the living helping the dying and should give solace to those facing death as well as to their friends and family.

Review

"Kathleen Dowling Singh opens our eyes to the spiritual aspects of dying, as Sherwin Nuland and Elisabeth Kubler-Ross did for the physical and psychological. Her message...can offer reassurance throughout life."-- Steven A. Schroeder, M.D., president, The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation

"The new Kubler-Ross has arrived, and her name is Kathleen Singh. In a stunning debut, she has written, quite simply, the most important book on the nature of dying since 'On Death and Dying. The Grace in Dying gives us new eyes with which to view death, and no one who reads Singh's work can come away from it without sharing her radiant vision. The book is a flat-out masterpiece.'"-- Kenneth Ring, Ph.D., author of "Heading Toward Omega and "Lessons From the Light"

"This splendid book is caressed by wisdom and compassion. It brings immense hope and meaning to life's final chapter."-- Larry Dossey, M.D., author of "Be Careful What You Pray For and "Healing Words"

"A profound and moving--and much needed--book."-- Ken Wilber, author of "Grace and Grit and "A Brief History of Everything"

"A profound and rich contribution with new and needed information."-- Sukie Miller, Ph.D., author of "After Death: Mapping the Journey"

"Kathleen Singh has written a stunningly powerful book. Her account of what happens to us as we are dying elucidates not only the spiritual character of the death process but also the underlying unity of life and death. Singh helps us understand what it means to die."-- Michael Washburn, professor of philosophy, Indiana University, South Bend; author of "The Ego and the Dynamic Ground and "Transpersonal Psychology in Psychoanalytic Perspective"

"Must reading! A very powerful and gentle antidote to the fear of dying both in ourselves and our loved ones."-- Seymour Boorstein, M.D., author of "Clinical Studies in Transpersonal Psychology and associate clinical professor of psychiatry, University of California, San Francisco, School of Medicine"

"Death is a wise but harsh teacher. It is easier to learn the lessons by educating yourself. Read and learn."-- Dr. Bernie S. Siegel, M.D., author of "Love, Medicine, and Miracles"

"As a physician who has spent many years present with women at the moment of birth, I have often found myself moved to tears by the sacredness of this moment, when we emerge into physical life. As I read through the pages of "The Grace in Dying, I found myself moved by the realization that the process of dying is the same in many ways as the process of giving birth, and that the same sacred energy that is so palpable in the delivery room will also be there for each of us at the moment of our death. There is great comfort in this remarkable book."-- Christiane Northrup, M.D., author of "Women's Bodies, Women's Wisdom"

"Kathleen Dowling Singh writes powerfully with penetrating understanding and compelling insights that unlock the hearts of those who climb through the tortuous tragedy of dying to recovering, growth, and grace." Rabbi Earl A. Grollman, D.H.L., D.D., author of "Living When a Loved One Has Died and "Caring and Coping When Your Loved One is Seriously Ill"

"Medicine today has great skill in its ability to postpone death, it is developing skill in the care of the body during that time, but it has almost no skill in the care of the soul. Kathleen Dowling Singh has now made an enormous and timely contribution by setting out a psycho-spiritual path toward transcendence that might well be used in the care of the soul by counselors and other midwives to the dying."-- Marilyn Webb, author of "The Good Death: The New American Search to Reshape the End of Life"

"A rich weave of truths and sublime beauty."-- Joan Halifax, founder, Upaya

A great and helpful book!

By Edgar Gutierrez

I just finished this book. It began as my 2014 Lenten reading, and it took me until today to finish it, but it was all worth it.

It is hard reading, not only because the material is very dense at times -I can handle that easily in other books if they hold my interest- but mainly because the book forced me to go deep into my own fear of death and dying.

The main thing I got out of it is a map of the dying process that goes beyond Kubler-Ross' stages of grief and into a profound description of what may happen as we melt into death, map that both our Western civilization and Christianity lack.

This will help me to be a better companion to those who are in their deathbed, and hopefully to me when my time comes.

The Grace in Dying is a masterpiece!

By Marjorie Rafferty

Having been a social worker and a Hospice volunteer for 4 years I got so much out of this extraordinary and magnificent book a few years ago. Also, with contemplative prayer a part of my life for over 30 years, it truly seemed to fit the path I was following. But, rereading it recently after the death of my husband of 44 years a year ago, it has been a profound experience. I want to copy every underline (and there are many!) to help my children understand what is going on as I too slip into the wonderful transition that lies ahead. There is a chapter toward the end, At the Edge of Life, that for me would be perfect instructions for them to follow . . . but then, they will have their own path. I whole heartedly recommend this book to all who work with the dying, those who want a clear picture of the dying and transforming processes in life and to those who might have experienced the death of a loved one and want to understand it more fully. It has been a great gift in my life.

In trying to cope with my family member's impending demise ...

By JKim

In trying to cope with my family member's impending demise, I've been struggling spiritually how to process/make sense of life without her. While spiritual, I'm not religious i.e. no church fellowship to lean on or gain support from. So my journey has been vastly one in solitude. I've leaned on books instead and I must say, in the end it was this book that single-handedly put the ineffable into words so that my mind can understand. All along, my soul had known as it has always had known but it was my mind that couldn't grasp it and this book made all things clear, understandable. It's Tolle's books + snippets from all religious beliefs combined.

I can let go now.
